

Quincy House

E.B.1.03

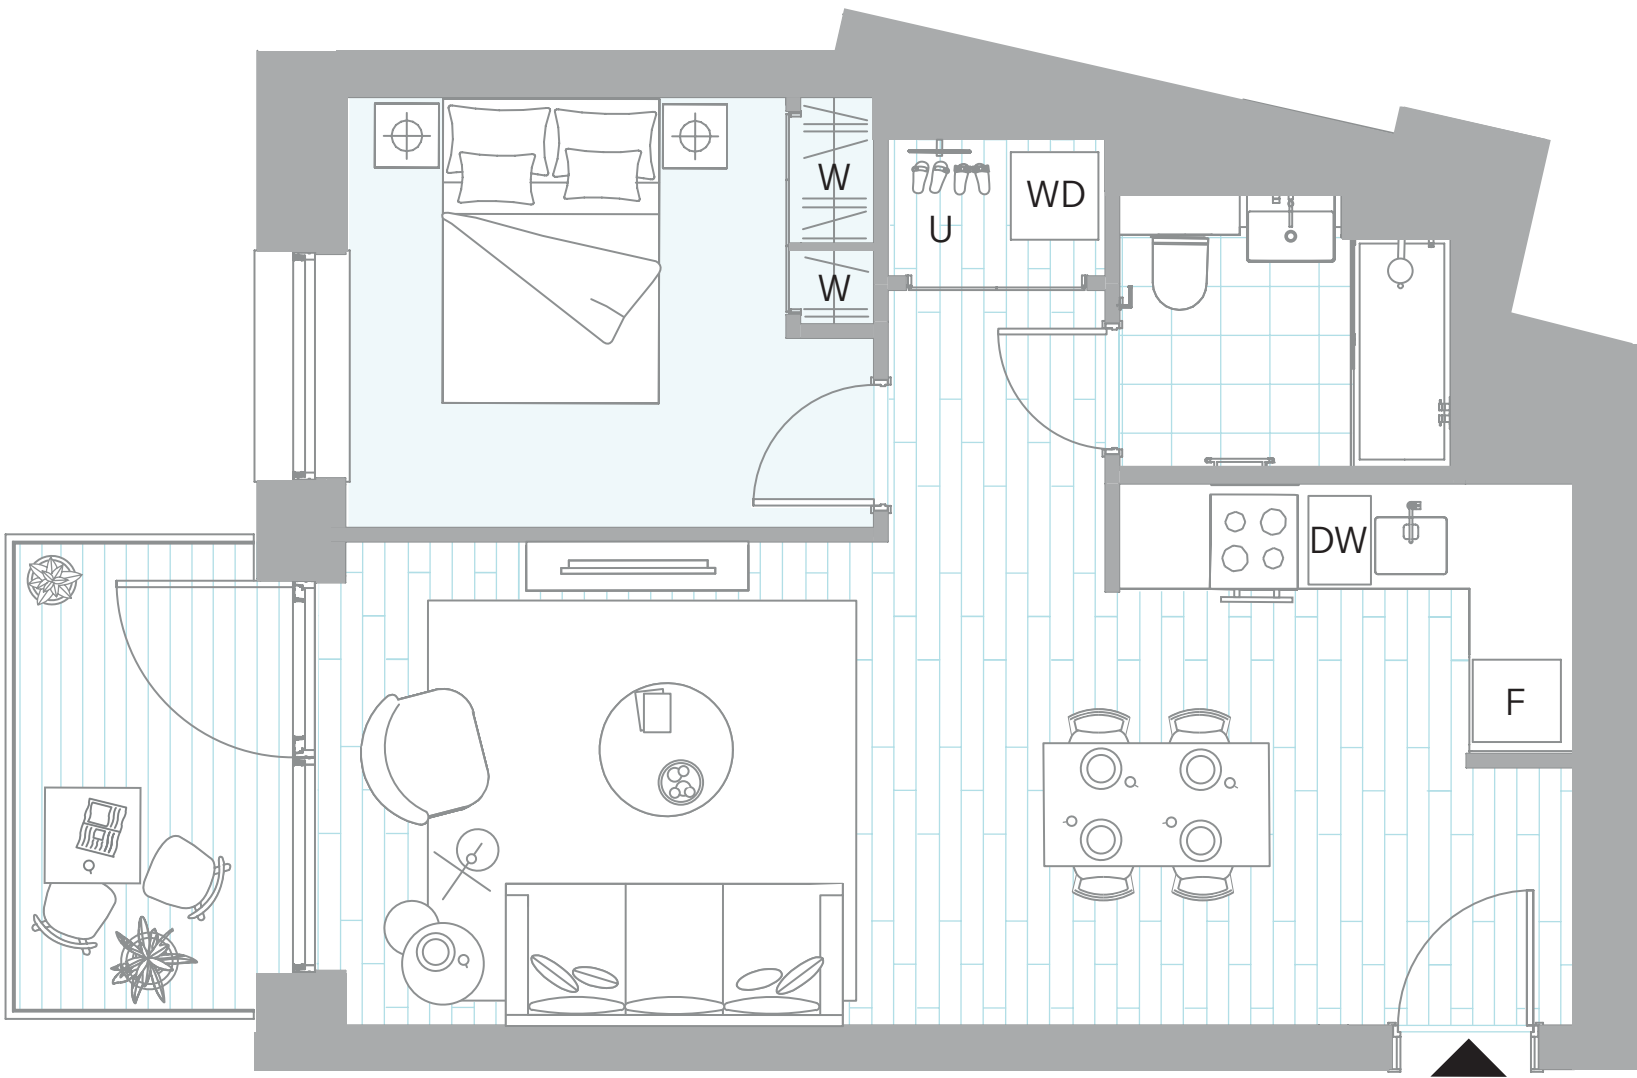

Stepping into these magnificent apartments at The Brentford Project connects you to a lush green panorama that starts at Syon Park, continues over the water to Kew Gardens, and then reaches out across London and as far as the eye can see. These are spaces made for living, with accessories of beauty and function, using natural materials as part of a contemporary modern aesthetic that provides a canvas for personal touches, and a platform for life.

Space is a precious commodity, and these apartments use it beautifully. Natural materials and subtle textures bring a warmth and sophistication to the interiors, with unique touches that ensure the craft and heritage of this special place are expressed in unique details.

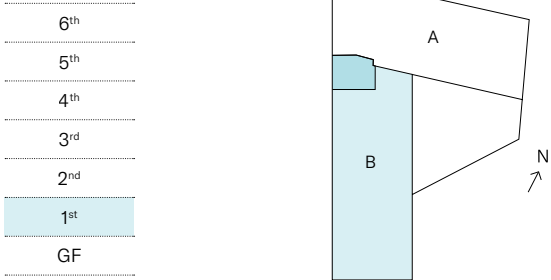

The best way to appreciate a view is to let nothing get in its way. Floor-to-ceiling windows minimise the fuss and maximise the experience of light and space.

Exterior signatures of wood, iron and stone are carried through to the thoughtful design of these welcoming and functional spaces. Worktops in finished concrete, details in matt black and Bertazzoni range cookers lift these spaces above the ordinary. Feature timber wall panelling adds a distinctively warm, natural texture and clean lines to the materiality of each kitchen.
